1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a vehicle headlamp. 2. Related Art A vehicle headlamp is described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,703,833. This prior art patent discloses a vehicle headlamp equipped with a first, a second and a third lens mounted in a recessed portion formed within a reflector. The reflector is fixed to a light source. Thus, the first, the second and the third lenses are located between the light source and the reflector. The first and third lenses are arranged in a first position and the second lens is arranged in a second position relative to the first and third lenses. A first distance between the first lens and the light source is shorter than a second distance between the third lens and the light source. The headlamp further includes a switch (referred to as an "operating portion switch" in U.S. Pat. No. 5,703,833) to execute a turn-on/turn-off of the headlamp by pressing the switch. The first and second lenses are movable in the direction toward and away from the light source and the third lens is movable in the direction toward and away from the light source. The first, second and third lenses are arranged on a support member. In the prior art headlamp, the second lens is located above the first lens and

Among the extraordinary achievements of America's transcontinental railroad was Union Pacific's construction of its route across the rugged Wasatch Mountains, a feat made possible by UP threading its main line through the Echo and Weber Canyons of Utah. Now, with Union Pacific's Wasatch Grade Route for Train Simulator, this famed and challenging UP line is re-created during the captivating steam-to-diesel transition era of the mid-1950s! Created by acclaimed developer Milepost Simulations, the Wasatch Grade route extends from Evanston, Wyoming to Ogden, Utah, a distance of 76 route miles, and brings to full life the memorable era when Union Pacific's four-motor steam locomotives worked side-by-side with the stylish and imposing EMD F7 diesels. Amid unforgettable western mountain scenery and unforgiving grades of nearly two per cent, you'll do battle with the Wasatch Range as you forward tonnage through the breathtakingly beautiful Echo and Weber Canyons, navigate the Cataract Rapids, and cross the Bridge of the Gods! In addition to masterfully replicated the always-bustling Union Pacific main line along the Weber River and Echo Creek, this route includes expansive yards and lineside facilities such as roundhouses and steam coaling towers as existed in the 1950s. Along with its three Union Pacific classic locomotives – the Big Boy, Challenger, and EMD F7 diesels – the route delivers a superb collection of 1950s-era freight rolling stock for Union Pacific and many of its predecessor railroads. Ogden was the key interchange point between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, and the Train Simulator route also provides Southern Pacific's distinctive "black widow" livery. And with the Union Pacific's Wasatch Grade route, you'll be ready to go right to work with a set of eight realistic career scenarios! Experience the wonderment - and the railroading challenges - of one of America's greatest and most famous western rail lines - with Train Simulator's Union Pacific's Wasatch Grade Route!KEY FEATURES:"...the end product seems so complete, so believable and so 'right' it would be a challenge to think of things to change," - Railway Gazette "I enjoyed the freedom to make changes, tweak settings and experiment with things as I saw fit. A minor correction. On page 5 of the review, I said "a 4th progression" for the game. Unfortunately, the game itself (not the descriptions) is in 4th progression. So the description is correct. Just a minor error... If you don't read other reviews on the board, you probably don't know how movies are made. One scene is shot, and actors are usually filmed in sequence, although sometimes they are shot in the order in which they appear in the script. Some filmmakers have a fairly loose and free style, experimenting with capturing actors' performances that are slightly unconventional or unique. This is what Stanley Kubrick and Baz Luhrmann achieved in their movies. They captured moments in their respective films that were unorthodox or unique, which caused them to be memorable. But in movies, it's usually very important to capture an event where a character has no time to say anything. It's when dialogue isn't present that the storyteller would have to rely on emotion and performance to tell it. A film with too much dialogue will be boring. If you look at the trailer for The Lego Movie, there isn't that many dialogue scenes in it. You'll barely even hear anything while the movie is going. It gives the scene a very humorous and exciting, if not a bit too unrealistic, feel. The main thing that was used to give it a comedic feel is the slapstick. The entire scene with the space shuttle falling out of the sky is without dialogue, and we know exactly what's happening throughout it. The slapstick element is the point of the scene. It may not have been as smooth in the movie as it was in the trailer, but it was mainly there for comedic value. In the movie, the scenes with musical numbers, which are predominantly used to tell the story through visual cues and song, have not only had dialogue at the beginning, but the dialogue is a bit more substantial and meaningful. The Jazz scene from Slumdog Millionaire is an example of one that really works well, due to the fact that all of the characters had something to say. Not to say it's what the movie should have been about, but that scene was a really effective and emotional scene that I had never seen in a movie before. It was also successful because of the music. It had a good, upbeat, modern jazz song, which gave it that happy, optimistic feel, while the downtrodden and downtrodden feeling of the characters was captured

What's new:

(2013) Galaxy Citizen continues the story of the galactic expansion of Privateer Press, with the use of world-building technologies allowed by the Syrinscape™ digital building and gaming platform. Galaxy Citizen brings the conflict between the Syndicate and the Reclamation into the G-World, where humanity is spread across hundreds of planets and hundreds of systems. Your role as a player is to control a mercenary vessel and join forces with one or more of the fleeing refugees from the Reclamation Forces to stop the Syndicate's forces from occupying his or her homeworld. Galaxy Citizen is a corporate campaign game, so you don't actually play a miniatures game; instead you use plastic "spheres" to control your mercenary vessel and weapons, along with various new digital technologies that are used to govern the game's reality.
